The Cafe
REPUBLIQUE

F Street and Fifteenth

Announces the Opening of the Most Unique
Place to Dine of Which Washington Can Boast
For Gentlewomen and Gentlemen

A cafe that's indescribably different. More like those resorts that continue to add to the fame of European capitals. A cafe destined to play a conspicuous part in the city's history as a gathering place for social, commercial, political and diplomatic Washington in search of gastronomic indulgence and an atmosphere that's most congenial.

A Cafe at Your Service Any Hour of the Day or Night
Good Things to Eat at Moderate Prices

For Breakfast
Menus to tempt the appetite not yet sharpened by the exertions of the day. Enhanced by quick, attentive service.

For Luncheon
A dainty tid-bit, perfectly prepared and attractively served, or as sumptuous a repast as the appetite may crave.

For Dinner
A galaxy of seasonable suggestions crowd a menu which omits nothing one might crave for the day's most substantial meal.

For Supper
The scope of the menus is limited only by the extent of nature's productiveness in field, stream and woodland.

The First Floor Restaurant
Seventy-five feet square of space—a gorgeously decorated palm garden—in the center a splashing fountain, inlaid with Moravian tile and surmounted with a cut glass urn on a pedestal surrounded by a beautiful bowl beneath, in which gold fish disport among aquatic plants and blooming flowers. The four walls are lined with artistically designed lattice over which runs a riot of twining vines.

The Rathskeller
Strictly German
The entire basement has been converted into a bit of old-world hospitality—a Rathskeller designed after the Dutch, with walls of rough tapestry brick, dark Flemish woodwork, and red tile flooring. On one side is a series of alcoves with tables and built-in benches.

The Kitchen
This culinary department is a marvel in hygienic arrangement and devices looking toward health and perfect sanitation. It is walled with white enamel brick. Always open to the inspection of guests just as the rest of the cafe.

A Model Bakery and Refrigerating Plant assure the quality and freshness of all products of the baker's oven and the retentive freshness of all perishables from the time they are received until consumed.
